Every fresh raid upon a gambling house adds additional weight about trap-doors. The important part ment Departments, which these contrivances play in the economy of the gambling-dens is unmistakable, and there cannot be the slightest doubt of the desirability of Colony. We refer to the stringent provisions of the Victoria Registration Ordinance (No. 7 of 1866), which were re-enacted in No. 9 of 1876 (the Public Gambling Amendment Ordinance). It enforcement of these sections (17, 18 and 19). Such action might turn out to be both impolitic and harsh. But as extreme powers are placed in the hands of the authorities to meet certain contingencies, and the offence of gambling is now assumed to have reached extraordinary dimensions-where else lies the need of a Commission—it is quite in order to insist upon the exercise of the to. Section 17 makes it lawful for fines imposed for public gambling being recovered from the householder; which it will be at once seen vastly increases the responsibility of persons holding Chinese Section 18 the householder is held liable to any fine for an offence proved to have been committed in his house in the same manner as if he had been the actual offender; which carries the Chinese principle of vicarious punishment a step further than the previous section. authorized to take the house into its own hands, and make use of the rents until any fine imposed shall have been satisfied, or until the householder comes forward to claim property. It may seem strange that any connection should be found to exist between those apparently arbitrary powers and the presence of the spring trap-doors to which allusion has already been made. But if a householder cares to inform himself concerning the character of his tenants and the nature of the uses to which they put his tenement, it is quite clear that he will find no difficulty in discovering that strong trap-doors and gambling-dens have a most intimate relation. In fact, if the sections of the Registration Ordinance were but enforced with reasonable strictness, householders would very soon discover it to be their interest to prohibit the use of such contrivances as trap-doors, and the sup-material diminution of the evil, would be the natural result. It may be taken for granted that the entire extinction of public gambling in Hongkong must be looked for amongst the millennial fruits: but we are convinced that much good might be done by the resuscitation and application of those measures which are still law in this Colony. Has Captain Deane ever honestly tried this means? or are his hands tied?

SUPREME COURT. IN PROBATE. (Before the Fult Court.)

Wednesday, July 30th.

The two cases connected with the administration of the estate of the late Mr G. U. Sands, were again before the Court to-day. It will be remembered that Mrs Sands brought an administration suit against Mr W. H. Forbes, the co-executor for account; and it was referred to Mr Barff, the deputy accountant, to report. This report was examined and approved by Mr Justice Francis. Mr Hayllar who, instructed by Mr Johnson of Sharp, Toller and Johnson, appeared for Mr Forbes, sought to amend that report in various particulars. At first he contended that it was not a perfected report, the reporter not having proceeded with some further questions which the Court had directed him to enquire into, as to the sale of the steamship which had been purchased by Mr Forbes, and the present position of all parties towards which was one of the chief points of the case.

The Ohief Justice said that it was the ordinary practice in England for a referee to report up to a certain point, his report raising certain questions which it would be for the Court to determine before giving further instructions.

the questions raised in the report all were immaterial to him save two, a and f, put in a plan, made by P.U. 37, Richard which really raised the whole of the questions between the parties in both of the suits, Mrs Sands' suit against the co-executor and the Chartered Bank v. Mr Forbes. He was about to enter into one of these at for whom he appeared had exercised throughout the whole of this business a reasonable degree of skill, care and attention and that he had done nothing which a reasonable man would not do; and had omitted nothing which a reasonable man would have done, which course, he quoted natural fall of about twenty feet extendauthorities to show, was the converse of ing along the pathway for some yards.

This was then done, and as there are between 60 and 70 paragraphs in the report, occupied some time. A lew amendments or additions were made on the terms of the

Mr Russell, after some further conversation, said he would be quite ready to consider any suggestion the Court might make. Mr Hayllar, for his client, was equally willing.

The Chief Justice at first said the parties were too far at sea and away from one another to allow of the Court making any suggestion just yet; they would have to be tossed somewhat more by the storms of legal procedure before the Court could take them in hand.

Court. By consent, a report by Mr Arnold, produced by Mr Hayllar, an admirable report he said, was also admitted in evidence.

The Court, after consultation, suggested that both parties might name as a suitable gentleman of commercial experience some merchant of whom they both approved to eit with the Court as assessor and go through the whole case. It would be the best thing for all parties were a fair, honourable and reasonable arrangement come to between them on such a basis as he and Mr Francis, with the assistance of such a gentleman could give them, would be able to suggest. He might tell both parties now that he did not think the case was one which should be decided strictly according to law. His mind would be very greatly relieved did he see any way to prevent extended sitigation and great loss.

He was then secured by Acham on his wrists and neck. And afterwards taken to Kowloon City. I returned at once to Yow-ma-ti, taking with me the knife and tiger's-tooth. Myself, P. C. Butlin and Inspector Cameron went to the house of the first prisoner at Tai Wan and searched it. His wife and two children were standing in the doorway; the door was padlocked. We found the two daggers (produced), one concealed in the wall and one under the bed; also two dollars (produced) in an earthenware pillow on the bed. A drawer was broken open by P. C. Butlin, and two rolla of dollars wrapped in paper were taken out. On one of the rolls was written in Chinese, "Total-weight-thirty dollars." While we were searching, the prisoner's wife and children were standing outside, crying and shivering. Tsang King You, the son of the decrased, was also standing at the door. When the rolls of dollars were found the Inspector ordered me to show bim the money; he then said "This is my father's money." house and said something to first prisoner's wife; by the Inspector's order arrested the man and took him to the station. The Inspector took charge of the money; I carried the drawer containing the other articles to the station. Inspector Cameron, P. C. Butlin and myself went to Kowloon City to the Mandarin's Court, and brought the first prisoner of the Mandarin soldiers; a charge of murder and highway robbery was entered against him. On the following morning while standing at the cell in which the first prisoner was detained, he called to me to speak with him and said :- "It was not only myself, there were Li Kat Tse, Li Ut Shan, and Li Ting Yan." Inspector Cameron prevented me from replying to prisoner. when first prisoner made a further statement through the Chinese interpreter at

The Yehsin had broken her. shaft, and was picked up at sea under sail about 100 miles from Chefoo, after signalling the gunboat for assistance. The weather was slightly squally as the two vessels were coming into port, but luckily no accident happened. A boat's crew of the Yehsin, which had been sent out to seek help, was brought in by a fishing hoat during the small hours of Friday morning. The Yehsin was bound from Newchwang to Amoy or Swatow, with a cargo of peas and beancake. She left for Shanghai, in tow of the Yungching, on the 20th instant. The question of the amount of salvage due to the Swinger has, it is believed, been referred to H.M. Consul.

The Condor has at last arrived, and will be-ready for "sale, freight, or charter," as soon as her sticks and gear are readjusted. The thanks of the owner or owners are due to the Commissioner of Customs, by whose courtesy the use of the steam launch was obtained on three occasions.

The Androklos, from Newchwang for the south, has put in at Chefoo, having been in collision with a junk outside. She is so badly damaged that she will have to discharge cargo and undergo repairs before proceeding on her voyage.

We have had very little else than rainy weather for the last month, and during the | Krik lest fortnight almost every day has brought more or less rain in very heavy and prolonged showers, sometimes accompanied by lightning and thunder. The rivers or water courses in the neighbourhood are so swollen as to seriously interfere with traffic on the roads to the interior.

The only day, so far, remarkable for its heat was Wednesday, the 16th, when the thermometer registered somewhere about 90° in the shade and 130° odd in the sun. That day no rain fell, but the southerly wind, heavily laden with moisture caused by evaporation, rendered the air very oppressive. Towards the evening a nice cool breeze set in.
